A teacher at Kachon Garden in Nihonzaka talks in English.

The English teacher explains that the students are learning about the weather. She asks them to describe what they think the weather will be like today. The students respond with their answers.

The teacher then asks the students to write a sentence about the weather using the correct English grammar. She circulates around the room to check their work and provide feedback.

After the lesson, the students are given homework to practice what they have learned. They are also encouraged to practice their English skills outside of class by speaking with their classmates and teachers.

The teacher emphasizes the importance of practicing English regularly to improve their skills. She encourages the students to find opportunities to practice their language skills both inside and outside of the classroom. She also suggests that they can practice by listening to English speakers, watching English-language videos, and reading English books.

The teacher concludes by thanking the students for their participation and for their efforts to improve their English skills.
